The Healthcare Distribution Alliance is the trade organization representing healthcare distributors — the vital link™ between 1,400 manufacturers and approximately 330,000 providers across the U.S., including pharmacies, hospitals, long-term care facilities, clinics and others.

Since 1876, HDA has helped members navigate regulations and innovations to get the right medicines to the right patients at the right time, safely and efficiently. HDA's non-profit organization, the HDA Research Foundation, studies and provides education focused on priority healthcare supply chain issues. Further, HDA's services include the Pharmaceutical Cargo Security Coalition.

HDA's mission is to:

- Advocate for sound public policy that supports patient access to medicines and medical products through safe, efficient and effective distribution.
- Lead the healthcare supply chain on policy issues, business practices and industry guidelines to inform and support member development of innovative solutions.
- Convene and partner with public and private stakeholders to facilitate discussions on industry issues, provide education and support the sharing of leading practices.
